THE CATALYST NETWORK

7 People Who Will Change Your Story

Here are seven kinds of people and how they can transform your story at work and in life.

1. The Mentor

- Who they are: Someone who is further along the path in a skill, career, or area of life you also want to develop.
- How they change your story: They shorten your learning curve. Instead of making every mistake from scratch, you can learn from their hard-won wisdom and direct feedback.

2. The Champion

- Who they are: Your biggest fan who amplifies your wins and who believes in you when you doubt yourself.
- How they change your story: They build your emotional resilience. When fear or imposter syndrome creeps in, their encouragement reminds you of your potential and pushes you to keep going.

3. The Truth-Teller

- Who they are: A grounded, honest person who refuses to let your ego run the show and who is unafraid to tell you what you need to hear rather than what you want to hear.
- How they change your story: They keep you humble and accountable. They call you out when you are self-sabotaging, making excuses, or drifting from your core values.

4. The Challenger

- Who they are: Someone with high standards who nudges, provokes, or pushes you past the edge of your comfort zone.
- How they change your story: They prevent complacency. By pushing you to try more difficult things—whether in your personal or professional life—they expand what you believe you can achieve.

5. The Safe Haven

- Who they are: A steady, calm, reliable presence who offers stability despite the chaos around you.
- How they change your story: They lower your stress and give you an emotional anchor. Knowing someone is consistently in your corner lets you take qualified risks elsewhere in life.

6. The Connector

- Who they are: A generous person who seems to know everyone and who enjoys bringing people together.
- How they change your story: They open doors you didn't know existed. They do not solve your problems directly, but they introduce you to the contacts and collaborators who could.

7. The Co-Traveler

- Who they are: Someone navigating roughly the same personal or career path or climbing the same emotional mountain as you.
- How they change your story: They offer mutual exchange, shared brainstorming, and validation. Knowing you aren't struggling alone can keep you from burning out.

OKLAHOMA CareerTech

THE CATALYST NETWORK

7 People Who Will Change Your Story

To establish these connections, you need to treat relationship-building like casting a net rather than waiting for chance. Here are some tips for finding the connections you need most:

- Auditing Your Circle
  - Map the gaps. Review the list of relationship types. Can you identify any of the slots that are currently unfilled? Focus on filling those first.
  - Assess your value. Ask yourself what you bring to the table. For example, Mentors may seek mentees who act, while Co-Travelers may look for reliable collaborators. Be ready to give before you ask to receive.
- Placing Yourself in High-Probability Environments
  - Go where they gather. You cannot find a Mentor or a Challenger if you remain at your desk or reject invitations to contribute or connect.
  - Leverage existing groups. Join high-intent spaces aligned with your goals, such as professional associations, clubs, or service organizations.
  - Use digital filters. Leverage social media platforms or specialized online communities to find people discussing topics you care about.
- Mastering the "Low-Stakes" Outreach
  - Make a small first move. Avoid immediately asking someone to be your Mentor or Challenger. Ask for a 15-minute virtual or in-person visit to talk about a specific project or insight they shared.
  - Lead with honesty. When reaching out to a potential Mentor or Connector, say what they did that inspired you. Flattery gets ignored, but sincere appreciation builds trust.
  - Act and acknowledge. If someone gives you advice, follow it, and then message them about the result.
- Embracing the Process
  - Expect to invest. Not everyone will have the personal chemistry or professional time to become a Truth-Teller or a Champion. Treat early chats as seeding the soil from which something may sprout.
  - Nurture the sparks. When you find someone who challenges you or offers that reassuring presence, prioritize them. Schedule a recurring monthly check-in to keep the momentum going.

OKLAHOMA CareerTech