Ramblings of a redneck farmer

By Doug Little

This past Friday and Saturday evenings I attended a men's conference in Laverne. Somewhere around 75 men from different churches and different communities came together and enjoyed fellowship, worship and scripture.

It was a great couple of evenings of God's word with great speakers. Two statements were made during the weekend that will stay with me for a long time. The first one that got my attention was "Doubt does not equal unbelief."

Those words really hit home for me. My faith is strong. For sure stronger than it has ever been. However, being the fallible human that I am, doubt creeps into my brain sometimes. When I don't understand where Jesus is leading me or the timetable of God's plan compared to what I think my timetable should be, I have wondered if my faith is where it should be.

That is probably my biggest flaw. Growing up I had to do things by myself. There really wasn't any other way sometimes and while that ingrained a work ethic and a stubborn streak in me, it also made me have some character blemishes, one being I grew up thinking I could do everything alone. So, when things don't happen on Doug's time, doubt creeps in.

Now doing things alone and putting your faith in Jesus really don't go together do they? I think I have done a pretty good job of me decreasing so Jesus can increase. But, sometimes that doesn't happen and the pressure of something needing to happen quickly comes and goes and yet I haven't seen how God is moving in my life.

Now to be fair, I know and believe that God is constantly doing 10,000 things in my life and I am aware of about three of them. That statement is attributed to John Piper. Yet, that still doesn't stop the feeling of doubt that crawls into your brain, courtesy of Satan, and when that doubt comes in it is inevitable to make the small jump to questioning your faith. Is my faith really as strong as I think it is? Do I understand completely what it takes to take Jesus as my Savior?

The quick answer is of course I do, but in that moment, you question and there is doubt.

I needed to hear those words. I needed the reminder that doubt is common with everyone, at least to some degree.

I needed reminded to continually put my trust in God. I needed reminded to be in God's word more. I needed reminded that God is faithful. I needed reminded that I can't derail God's plan for my life. I am not that powerful. I needed reminded to completely surrender to Jesus. I have trouble doing that to the point I need too. I needed the reminder to have patience and let me tell you, that is hard for me. I needed the reminder that doubt does not equal unbelief.

You know, sometimes, even things that you know aren't true you needed reminded that they aren't true? That's where I was this weekend and now I rest a little easier.

What was the second statement that impacted me this weekend?

Well, one of the speakers said, "John The Baptist would have eaten calf fries too" I mean if he ate locust and wild honey, why would he not have eaten calf fries. I may remember that statement for the rest of my life.

John 20:27 reads, "Then he said to Thomas, Put your finger here; see my hands. Reach out your hand and put it in my side. Stop doubting and believe."

It was a great weekend. Full of God and full of great advice. Even when doubt is there, just believe.

Talk to you next week.
